We aim to protect and enhance the wildlife of Gwent, draw attention to conservation issues through publicity and campaigns, and encourage public enjoyment and awareness of the countryside. Management of nature reserves forms only part of our work; we also offer help and advice to industry, local authorities, landowners, schools and members of the public, to encourage the conservation and appreciation of all wildlife, both common and rare. Education is fundamental to the future of the environment.

Much of the Trust's work wouldn't be possible without our volunteers and we very much appreciate this valuable contribution. There's a huge variety of volunteer work to get involved in – practical conservation work, species and site surveying, inspiring the next generation about wildlife or helping at events are just some of them.

Everyone is welcome; whether you're looking for work experience or to share your experiences, we would love to hear from you, regardless of the amount of time you have available.

Find your volunteering role

Have a look through the different roles from the categories above and see if there's something for you. Not seeing quite what you're after? Get in touch and let us know the sort of opportunity you are looking for, the experience you'd like to gain or the skills you'd like to share and we'll see what we can do!

Land management & conservation

Get closer to nature! Why not help to warden a nature reserve, or take part in practical work such as hedge laying or scrub clearance? Whatever the task, tools, training and supervision are provided. You do not have to be experienced – everyone does what they can.
