Woodberry Wetlands

Opened by Sir David Attenborough in 2016, Woodberry Wetlands is a thriving habitat for migratory birds and one of the Trust's top visitor attractions.

We manage 36 nature reserves across the capital including various habitats such as woodland, grassland and wetland

Our work at these nature reserves aims to meet biodiversity targets as well as creating safe and enjoyable places to visit. Most of our sites are managed on behalf of local authorities and utility companies under lease, although we own a few reserves outright. While resources are limited, we are always keen to explore opportunities to further broaden our portfolio of wildlife sites.

In addition, our volunteers and projects work at other London green spaces, including community gardens and housing estates, with partners such as social landlords, local authorities, community groups, and conservation bodies.
