

Musharraf urged to go as rivals win Pakistan poll

voters rejected his for who has ruled since Musharraf overthrew in a coup and only allowed back from exile three months ago, urged Musharraf to accept he was no longer wanted. "He would say when people would want, I will go. Today the people have said what they want," Sharif said after his party ran a close second in Monday's polls. A wave of sympathy helped the Pakistan People's Party of assassinated former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto to emerge as the largest party in the 342 seat National Assembly. But it does not have a majority and will need to seek coalition partners. Bhutto's assassination in a suicide attack on Dec. 27, heightened concern about the stability of nuclear-armed Muslim state, where al Qaeda leaders have taken refuge. Musharraf, who emerged as a crucial U.S. ally in a "war on terror" that most Pakistanis think is Washington's, not theirs, has seen his popularity plummet in the last year as he reeled from one political crisis to another. of happy opposition supporters celebrated in the streets in cities across the country as results rolled out showing pro-Musharraf politicians losing. DISTANT THIRD The pro-Musharraf Pakistan Muslim League trailed a distant third, and the party's spokesman conceded defeat but kept open the possibility of joining a coalition. "Obviously, the nation has spoken through the ballot. We couldn't convince them. They have rejected our policies and we have accepted their verdict," PML's Tariq Azim Khan told Reuters. "For the best interest of the country, we're willing to cooperate and work with anybody." While it was not a presidential election, a hostile parliament could try to remove Musharraf. Sharif said he planned to meet Bhutto's widower, Asif Ali Zardari, who took over the helm of the PPP, on Thursday. "I am looking forward to working with all democratic forces," he said. "I invite all to sit together and free Pakistan of dictatorship, sit together to say goodbye to dictatorship forever." Some analysts said differences between the PPP and Sharif's party made a coalition doubtful. Counting was continuing with results still awaited in less than 20 seats, but no party could win a majority. As of 5 p.m., unofficial results for 252 seats showed Bhutto's Pakistan People's Party (PPP) had won 86 and Sharif's Pakistan Muslim League (Nawaz) had 65. The pro-Musharraf PML trailed with 37. Small parties and independents shared the others. A few seats weren't contested, while 70 seats reserved for women and religious minorities will be divided up proportionately among parties according to the number of votes they won. Musharraf has said he would accept the results and work with whoever won to build democracy in a country that has alternated between civilian and army rule throughout its 60-year history. Increasingly isolated, Musharraf allowed Bhutto to return from eight years in self-exile in October, and, pressured by Saudi King Abdullah, he let Sharif come back a month later, though he was barred from standing in the election. DECISIVE FACTOR Bhutto's slaying intensified anti-Musharraf sentiment, with few people accepting the government's assertion that she was killed by al Qaeda linked militants, and her death resulted in the vote being postponed from Jan. 8. Some analysts said reasons for PML's defeat ranged from Musharraf's unpopularity to resentment over inflation, food shortages and power cuts. Sharif's party found favour for its demands that judges dismissed last November, when Musharraf imposed a brief spell of emergency rule, should be reinstated to decide whether he could keep the presidency. Pakistan's main stock market welcomed the peaceful polls and absence of rigging complaints, and shares rose more than 3 percent. But dealers said the prospect of further political upheavals made investors nervous. At least 20 people were killed in election violence, including, Zardari said, 15 PPP activists. But that was not as bad as feared after a bloody campaign. Opposition concerns about rampant rigging by Musharraf's supporters also proved unfounded. An election watchdog group put turnout at 35 percent. A secular ethnic Pashtun nationalist party was winning in North West Frontier Province. Islamist parties, that won in 2002, were soundly trounced as moderate forces re-established their influence on Pakistan's most militant-prone region.
