Its advisable to choose the field which interest you most, rather than running behind opportunity.

Opportunities go on changing in course of time, but burden over mind gift you depression.

CA is not my passion....its a need now.

That's the reason I was in dilemma because I have already faced depression and had been studious and interest in many unconventional things as well.

I am not money minded.

But at 29 I am clueless now.

I have left an MNC due to toxic environment in New Delhi.

Now I have an option to go and get a job and study side by side or just study and become a CA first.

I need to manage the work life balance if I go for the job.

I have no idea about sector, domain, etc.

All I know is I am in a new city and has got a new life after depression...a second chance to live , to discover and to grow.

I don't have a friend here.

I am doing yoga.... following a diet and trying to learn because I have came a long way since the age of 16 suffering with something unknown.

I need to become tech savvy and many more things .

The main question is whether you will be able to clear the course under the present condition, as you are not able to focus on the subjects.....
