Why do men have nipples? By Dr. Mehran Sam PhD

Why do men have nipples?

Humans are mammals like cats and monkeys and similar to other mammalian species only females generally nurse the young through their nipples with the milk produced in their mammary glands. So do men need nipples? or why men have nipples in the first place?

It's a less known fact that men's breasts and nipples are just as functional as the female counterparts. If they take or for dietary reasons produce some extra doses of female hormones, men can also lactate just like females do. It has been suggested that male breastfeeding can even lead to emotional bonding between a child and the father as well.

So why do men have nipples? For the exact same reason they have two ears and two eyes: because they have been designed and created as such by, as we Raelians believe, our extraterrestrial scientific creators, the Elohim.

Many believe that the similarities among species, like dogs, cats, and humans, all having mammalian characteristics, are the indication that all species come from the same ancestor through an evolutionary process.

Yes indeed we also believe there has been an evolutionary process. But it was in the minds of the scientists who came to the earth from another planet. They first created simple life forms and then over time developed and evolved their techniques to create cats, monkeys and eventually human beings in their own likeness.

Of course only the creators themselves know the exact reason for their choices and why they maintained the male form similar to a female's in the chest area but it's not unreasonable for us to speculate. A team of scientists who become experts in creating mammalian forms, males and females, do not reinvent the wheel each time they want to create a new species. The Elohim scientists perhaps only wanted to improve their methods without a need for a great genetic modification moving from one species to another as removing nipples in males would require such a change.

It is understandable why a science team would not have the desire to alter the genetic blueprint of their prized mammalian species. Doing that would require dramatic molecular and genetic changes in their design. Why would you want to risk failure in making big unnecessary changes when you already have a successful design that has proven to work well in the most simple mammalian species like a mouse. But also perhaps they even grew fond of their own design and a male with nipples looked more attractive than without. Can you imagine Michelangelo's David without nipples!?

However perhaps most importantly, we need to take note that all the epithelium or the skin tissue covering our body surface is composed of sensitive sense receptors of all kinds including those for sensing touch, temperature, pain, pressure, and pleasure. The number and sensitivity of these receptors are increased in the erogenous organs like lips, vagina, penis and you guessed it right, the nipples. Our whole body and it's epithelial cover is a sensual and sexual paradise for enjoying life and experiencing pleasure. The nipples play their own part in this marvelous existence as a human being in males, females, hermaphrodites and transsexuals alike.

Those who believe human body is for procreation and survival only, only procreate and survive. But those who believe their body is a pleasure toy for enjoyment and fun, live a happy, balanced and joyful life everyday loving and respecting their own body from their penis to nipples and from their clitoris to being topless in public. This second group includes us the Raelians.
